

I would like to echo the comments of many others that the competition provided by a third satellite company like Voom is critical to continuing to advance development of additional (improved) satellite services. Acquisition of this satellite by one of the two "monopolies" of satellite service will lead to continued stagnation of development of high definition services.